There is a growing body of research that suggests that the use of a structured approach to the development of a business plan can lead to a more successful outcome. The structured approach involves the use of a series of questions that guide the user through the process of developing a business plan. The questions are designed to help the user identify the key elements of the business plan, such as the market, the competition, the financials, and the management team. The structured approach is a useful tool for anyone who is developing a business plan, as it helps to ensure that all the key elements are covered and that the plan is well-structured and easy to understand.
