The Heritage Statement submitted in support of this application details how the proposed development is located outside the boundary of the Saxon and medieval settlement of Donington, with previous trial trenching to the north having revealed that this area was in agricultural use. It is also likely that any potential prehistoric remains are sealed by a considerable depth of later silts and so are unlikely to be impacted by groundworks. Whilst Donington is located at the end of the Salters Way Roman road, there are no known finds of Roman material from the vicinity of this site, nor were any artefacts visible in the walk over survey carried out during the Heritage Statement.

There is thus insufficient evidence to recommend further archaeological involvement in association with this application. No archaeological input required.
