This site is in an area of archaeological interest being situated within an extensive area of cropmarks indicating the presence of Roman activity, including field systems, enclosures, trackways, and settlements.

Had this office been given the opportunity to comment on these proposals prior to the work being carried out, we would have sought additional information regarding the groundworks methodology. Recent experience with man ges being built across the county has drawn our attention to the extensive excavations and drainage works frequently now being undertaken to construct them, which might not be apparent from such plans.

In this case any destruction of the archaeology on this site has already occurred, and therefore we cannot contribute anything further to this as a retrospective application.
