Whilst it is regrettable that parts of the building have already been demolished, albeit elements that appear to have been of lesser significance, this has removed the opportunity to secure appropriate mitigation through a programme of historic building recording. With the lean-to structures already removed, it is no longer possible to fully record these elements as part of the building's historic development.

Notwithstanding this concern, I do not object to the proposal. The principal and most significant part of the building is to be retained, and the proposed works would not result in any further harm to its architectural or historic significance. As such, no built heritage objection is raised.
